NEW YORK — Insurance agent Clif Rosenberry knows firsthand what can happen when a family's breadwinner dies without life insurance: His brother was killed at the age 39 in a work accident, and didn't have his own policy.

"He had a wife, two kids, brand new house ... and not a speck of life insurance," Rosenberry said. "The family wound up having to sell the house, having to move. It was an absolute mess."

It is scenarios like this that have led the insurance industry to sponsor National Life Insurance Awareness Month each September to encourage Americans to take a hard look at life coverage.
